Serving Lemon Grove and nearby communities

Thursday, September 3, 1998

I don't remember much about my first day of kindergarten except that Webster Elementary School was a huge, sprawling complex filled with strangers all bigger than I.

All 25 of us sat on green indoor-outdoor carpet in three or four rows. We took naps on little mats. Although I aspired to be a row leader, I don't believe I ever made it. I don't remember the principal's name, but I do recall several teary visits to her office.

Webster was built in 1956 on the eastern frontier of San Diego City, just north of where 47th Street crosses Highway 94. Coca-Cola Bottling has a plant there, next to KGTU (then, KOGO) studios. The school cost $300,000 to build and was designed for 400 students, many to come from Chollas Elementary's burgeoning attendance area.

Edie Noonan, who would teach kindergarten some 30 years, lived in Lemon Grove. She gave us a hug every day when we came to school. She had a morning and an afternoon class, each with 25 kids. Of the 50 kids in the Class of 1964, only two were black. Two were Asian. Several looked Hispanic, but the vast majority were white.

Within six years, that demographic profile would completely reverse. Only a handful of kids in 1970's sixth-grade class were white. I would not be among them, as my parents moved us to East County in 1967.

White families moved out of the Webster area (then called Imig Park) as fast as black families were moving in. The neighborhood remains predominantly black as well as impoverished. Last year, Webster was named one of San Diego Unified's lowest-performing schools, in danger of possible closure and complete re-staffing.

I ended up at Spring Valley Elementary. After two years at Spring Valley Junior High, I attended Mount Miguel High School and went on to get a degree in journalism. It turns out my best friend from kindergarten moved to Spring Valley in 1973, graduated from Monte Vista High and owns a small business in the San Diego State University area.

In fact, the Class of 1964 has done pretty well. It seems everybody I need to know, I met in kindergarten.

El Cajon Blvd., 3 1/2 miles from Webster as the crow flies.

Going to Jeff's house would be a perilous journey down the dirt path from Webster, through a storm drain culvert under Chollas Parkway and up a steep Fairmount without sidewalks.

Jeff went to Webster through sixth grade and then on to Horace Mann Junior High, near the corner of El Cajon Blvd. and 54th Street. Although the demographics of the neighborhood were rapidly changing, Jeff, like most little kids, didn't really take note of race until he hit seventh grade.

"I remember going to Horace Mann and the white kids telling me I needed a new wardrobe," he says. "I guess the way I talked and dressed were black. Most of my friends from Webster were black."

There was a stabbing in the bathroom at Horace Mann that was taken to be race-related. Tension built as high school kids from Lincoln and Crawford came down to 54th Street for a show of force.

Jeff's parents seemed to feel the tremors, both from racial tension and the construction of Interstate 805, which was ploughing up the backyard for the Home Avenue offramp.

In 1973, the Ousleys moved to Casa de Oro.

"My parents are not racists, but they probably didn't want to be a minority," Jeff says. "They were probably concerned about their property value. When the freeway came, it was like, 'We're out of here.'"

Jeff went to high school at Monte Vista, where racial tension was light by comparison, but got more media play. Jeff got on the track team, the swim team and played waterpolo. He heard the word "nigger" being used with frequency for the first time at Monte Vista.

Jeff liked Spring Valley. The kid next door had a black-bottomed pool and played guitar. Across the street, another kid played flute and was heavily into one of Jeff's idols, Jethro Tull. They immediately formed a band.

Eventually named Blue Wind, Jeff's band made KGB's "Homegrown 5" album with a song called "Earthquake." They played San Diego State and opened for some national acts at Montezuma Hall.

Jeff went to Grossmont College, but figured his future lay on the Billboard charts.

"I had this sociology professor at Grossmont saying four out of five people in our class would live within 10 miles of their birthplace doing some kind of work similar to their parents," he recalls. "I thought, 'Not me! I was going to be a rock star and get out of Dodge.'"

Although he made trips to Seattle, the midwest and Europe, Jeff stayed in East County. His best friends remained the kids from Horace Mann, and he married his high school sweetheart, a former homecoming queen at Crawford High.

Bonnie Newman was a floral designer and the couple operated Bonnie's Bouquets from 1983 until their divorce in 1991.

Jeff kept the flower stand on El Cajon Blvd. and 63rd Street. When he isn't delivering bouquets, a job not completely unlike his father's frozen food distributorship, he still writes songs and performs with a band.

If I had known where Jeff was when I got married (also in 1983), I would have had him do my flowers and music. I'll certainly have him do my funeral.

Kenny Quon Civil Engineer

Kenny Quon is the only kid in my kindergarten picture wearing a tie. Suspenders and a bow tie. I did not know it at the time, but Kenny is Chinese. Formal dress would certainly be the requirement for picture day at school.

For the last 11 years, Kenny has been a civil engineer with the city of Carlsbad. His job is to scrutinize developers bearing subdivision plans.

Kenny lived over on the eastern end of the Webster district, on Westover Place. His parents, now in their 70s, still live there. For years, the family operated Quon's Market on Imperial Avenue in Encanto. Although they've added locks to their doors and bars to their windows, Kenny's parents have never thought of moving.

It's just that traditional Chinese way.

"Education is stressed — it was a given that I was going to college," Kenny says. "My parents owned a grocery store and it was clear I was going to do something better."

Kenny's father came to the U.S. from Mainland China in the 1920s. He was a child accompanying his father, who had left wife and extended family for a better life. It was common for Chinese men to do this, and the two never returned.

Kenny's parents met in the 1940s, when his mom-to-be fled the communist revolution in China. The Quons would not speak Chinese to their children and Kenny grew up learning only English.

In kindergarten, he did not ponder much on being Chinese unless Mrs. Noonan happened to ask the class to share about what they had for dinner.

"We had rice and soup every night, and sometimes other Chinese dishes," Kenny says. "I was embarrassed sometimes when asked what we were eating. We ate with chopsticks and never had kids over."

Kenny's inclinations toward math and drawing flourished at Horace Mann Junior High. He enjoyed drafting classes and shop, and dreamed about being an architect. The Webster neighborhood was becoming predominantly black, but this didn't matter much to Kenny until he got to Crawford.

At Crawford, suddenly, there were kids from other communities looking down their noses at Webster kids.

"My dad told me that blacks were moving in because they couldn't go anywhere else," Kenny recalls. "But he told me they were just like us. We all seemed to get along."

The Irish Troubles

This is Saturday, Aug. 22, 1998, at 3:10 p.m. Today the entire nation observed a moment of silence in honor of the many innocent victims of the recent bombing in the village of Omagh. Tears flowed openly and the prayers were fervent in the wish that no such tragedy would ever occur again. Both factions of the peace process that appeared to be so very hopeful, were vocally abhorrent of the senseless taking of innocent life. There was even a set of twins, yet unborn, that were counted in the death roll.

Omagh is a small community in the northwest of Ireland, very close to the Ulster Border. Our visit to Donegal was a mere 30 kilometers from the village and we witnessed, still occurring, the national revulsion of the act. Masses are held almost continuously in the south of Ireland, the same as in the north.

We have been given a rather extensive discourse on the "troubles" and in a very non partisan manner, I must say. The real basis of contention is not, as every one seems to think, religious separation of Christian philosophies. The true causes are three — #1 Ethnicity, #2 Power and #3, Revenge/Retaliation.

Atrocities are not new, and have been sprinkled throughout history, especially in Ireland and Britain. The Cromwellian Era seems to have been horrendously cruel to the native Irish, and they were presented to degrees that keep alive the hatred to this day. The use of religious differences, Protestant vs. Catholicism, was a convenient banner under which to fight the wars. By outlawing the Catholic religion, putting priests to death for saying Mass, and a systematic genocide of the Irish by the British—they have kept the metal of hatred white-hot over the years.

Ireland is a treasure-trove of invention, art, music and engineering. At every turn is a castle, or a shrine that goes back thousands of years. Religious monuments predate the pyramids of Egypt and Stone Hedge. The education, and writing by the works has truly done much to save civilization, as the book says.

If not from heritage, the overall profound accomplishments of the Irish race and the colorful tales, make a visit here memorable. Jackie and I recommend it highly. As they say here "Céad Mile Fáilte" ("1,000 welcomes") and we might add "Bail ó Dhia Ort" ("God Bless You").

Lemon Twist

by Cheryl Cohen

Don't have time to have kids? Don't worry, you can adopt a book through the San Diego County Library's Adopt-A-Book program, and name it anything you want. Adopt-A-Book is also a way for library patrons to contribute money directly toward buying books for their community libraries. To acknowledge your contribution, a book plate in each adoptee may be personally tattooed, or ... inscribed. The beauty in this, is that you can check it out when you feel like it, and return it when you can't get a sitter. When it's time for Preschool Storytime at 10:30 a.m. on Tuesdays at the Lemon Grove Library, your little one can already be there, and even be the subject itself. By the way, if you need help reading to your own kidlet, call 1-800-231-0959. Someone on the other end of the line will do their best to assist you.

After spending all your time at Little Darlings, you sinners oughta be ready for some religion. Well, at least you'll be hungry, right? Come on down with ten of the dollars you were going to stuff into someone's G-string, and lovingly place them instead inside pockets of those offering the collection plate (that would be the plate which comes before the one underneath your breakfast) at the Lemon Grove Prayer Breakfast, from 7 - 8:30 a.m., Friday, Sept. 25, at the Lemon Grove Senior Center, 8235 Vernon St. in Lemon Grove. The guest speaker will be Deron Higgins, executive director of Youth for Christ, and you can get tickets from your church coordinator, or by sending your $10 check made payable to the Lemon Grove Chamber of Commerce, mailed to Judy Skene, City of Lemon Grove, 3232 Main St., Lemon Grove, 91945. A portion of the proceeds will benefit the Lemon Grove Food Bank. If that isn't enough agencies for you, just add all the names of the churches involved.

Just when we thought we'd gag if we had to nap through one more go-round of the Planning Dept.'s proposed changes to the development and engineering fees, they've done all the regurgitation for us, and the fun begins once again at a public hearing on Sept. 15. Community Development Director, Linda Niles said that she was so stunned when city council decided to stick with the old fees last time, she forgot to mention that there were some fees which could not remain the same because they are being charged more than the city's cost to administer them. Look for fees to be lowered to the point where you'll wanna demand a refund.

Am I the only one that's starting to feel sorry for Bob Baker? Look next door at College Ford, where they've got enough junk flappin' in the wind and draped over fences and the buildings that it looks like a cross between Avenida Revolucion in Tijuana, and a street in San Francisco's Chinatown. Baker might even feel a little impotent with his measly unpainted light poles. He's already had to endure several wrist-slapping letters from the city about violations of city code. His application for changes to his PDP may even take a few nano-seconds to get pushed through to approval. So, John Wood, have some pity, will ya? Because unless ol' Bob can keep littering up the rest of that section of Federal Blvd. with more illegal banners and such in the interim, he could suffer from some pretty serious balloon envy.

Mary Curran-Downey is a columnist for the San Diego Union-Tribune. I had no idea she went to the Douggie Yount "I dunno the difference between a column and an article" School of Journalism. I wanted to tender a response to her piece from last week, about honesty in journalism (don't laugh) -which was sparked by Boston Globe columnist, Mike Barnicle, who resigned after his bosses determined that some of the characters and stories in his columns were "made up". Evidently disappointed in his creativity, Curran-Downey wrote that "when we columnists write about specific people, when we quote them, we are held to the same standard as the reporters writing news stories." Sorry, Mary. I just couldn't relate. Here in Twistville, reality is just a state of mind - and usually, it's someone else's.

Did you notice that the last 50th Anniversary Commemorative Issue of the Review didn't make it to your house within this millennium? Thanks to the Lemon Grove Post Office - you can bet we sure did. Your paper was waiting on their loading docks for label corrections (they get touchy-when you're called "resident") which bottom-lined into (imagine this) more money, until we finally gave it to someone to hand-deliver all 9,000 of them for less than half the price! With this edition, from now on, this paper is FREE, we can mail from La Mesa now, and you can pick it up all over town and take it directly to a bathroom near you!

Send all your information about Jill Greer to the Review or directly to me at 619-264-3153 (msg.), 264-4180 (fax), or E-mail me at cirious@cts.com. I'll make sure to give it the treatment it deserves.

Kindergarten

Kenny would often help out at the family market, which local Spanish-speakers had dubbed "Chino's." Encanto was OK, but Lemon Grove and La Mesa were nice. His dad told him they didn't get a lot of trouble in Encanto because Chinese were looked upon as just another minority group. Whites would have had a much harder time.

Kenny graduated from Crawford in 1976 and enrolled at SDSU. Feeling more technical than artistic, he majored in engineering. SDSU had no architecture program anyway. He married Cynthia Linn in 1985, hired on at Carlsbad and now lives in Carmel Mountain Ranch.

The Quons retired and lease the store to another grocer. Kenny can often be found in the Webster neighborhood, visiting the parents and occasionally driving down the streets where he once walked to school.

The next time I need a building permit, I'll make sure I'm living in Carlsbad.

Winnie Dobbs Drug Store Honcho

When I tried to recall names from my kindergarten class, I could only remember boys. Jeff Ousley remembered boys. Kenny Quon and Carey Pico remembered boys. But what about girls, I asked.

They all remembered Winnie Dobbs.

Winnie only went to Webster one year. Mrs. Noonan's kindergarten class, but she made a lasting impression.

Maybe it was the fact that she was suddenly off, going to a Catholic school way on the other side of Euclid. Maybe it was because her family lived on Ridgeview Drive for years, and she came back to the school scene at Horace Mann. Maybe it was her green-blue eyes.

She doesn't remember it, but Jeff says Winnie is the first girl he ever kissed.

Winnie currently supervises the Rite Aid store in Tierrasanta.

She was born fourth in a family of six girls and three boys. All nine Dobbs children have the same parents. The house had three bedrooms, one for the parents, the girls and the boys. Holy Spirit Catholic Church didn't have a kindergarten, so the kids began at Webster and then transferred to parochial school.

As much as she is remembered, Winnie has only vague memories of kindergarten. She made the trek down Fairmount with the Ridgeview contingent, past the trailer park in the bottom of the gulley. She knows the neighborhood was changing, but this did not seem to alarm her parents.

She graduated from Crawford in 1975, a year ahead of her age group, pressed by her parents to take summer school and amass credits early. Her father, a barber, was killed in a freak accident in 1979 and Winnie left San Diego.

"I moved because I wanted to get away from my family," Winnie says. "I came back because I missed them."

Even so, Winnie took flight to Portland, Ore., because her sister, Rose, lived there. Rose was a disk jockey at a radio station and Winnie worked the front desk at hotels. She had time to dream of working on a cruise liner or becoming a cosmetologist like her sister, Barbara.

She returned to San Diego and earned her cosmetology license, but did not go on to cut hair. Barbara's money had been impressive, but the work was not for Winnie.

She fell into retail and watched Payless Drugs merge with Thrifty and then get bought out by Rite Aid. Ice cream went from a nickel a scoop to 89 cents. Winnie lives in Kearny Mesa with her mom, who rents the old Ridgeview house to sister Rose, an engineer at KGTV.

She never married and has no children.

The next time I need decongestant, I'm going to visit Winnie.

Phillip Bell Fireman

The Bells went to the same church as my family. Our Redeemer Lutheran Church sat opposite the top of the Euclid offramp from Highway 94, across from where the Rancho Drive-in once stood.

In 1964, it was a little white church in a little white neighborhood. Now it's a bigger brown church in a bigger brown neighborhood. White Lutherans leaving Imig Park would commute from as far as Lakeside and Alpine for services.

We drove in every Sunday from La Mesa. The Bells, who moved to Jamul in 1968, commuted as well. Because of Our Redeemer, I would run into Phillip Bell all the way through our high school years.

Phillip walked to Webster by himself, a couple of blocks south on Brookline Street. His older brother always had other things to do and was on his own schedule. It was 1964, and parents didn't worry about kids walking to and from school.

Phillip remembers when the first black family moved within playing distance. Of course, we had a black kid named Kenneth Williams in our class, but he lived across the canyon near Ridgeview. This family was just around the corner on Date Street.

"I remember hearing comments along the line of 'there goes the neighborhood,'" says Phillip, now a captain in the Vista Fire Department. "But I didn't really know what they meant. The new neighbors were the nicest people."

Phillip's mother was an immigrant, a Russian with a thick accent and assertive temperament. Her family fled to Mongolia during the Soviet revolution. She met Leslie Bell in Shanghai while he was on tour with the Navy prior to World War II.

He didn't speak Russian and she didn't speak English, but the sign language must have been fabulous.

The Bells were in their early 40s when they adopted Phillip and Leslie Jr., two biological brothers abandoned by their natural mother. Phillip noticed that mom had no problem getting involved with the PTA and school functions, although she had a good 20 years on most of the other grade-school mothers.

The move to Jamul didn't seem to have anything to do with race.

"Dad always wanted a place in the country," Phillip says. "We drove a half-hour to church every Sunday."

Phillip attended Jamul Las Flores through eighth grade. He entered Monte Vista High School the year his dad died.

Although he was in the same grade as Jeff Ousley, their paths never crossed at Monte Vista. For reasons he can't remember today, Phillip transferred to Valhalla High for his senior year. He had always planned on being a doctor and was happy to take the Ohio Vocation Interest Survey, a battery test given seniors to determine their occupational interests.

He answered every question with visions of medical school dancing before him.

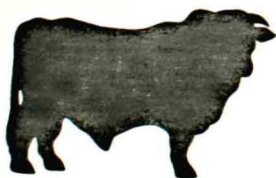

Near the end of the test, he was asked to write down three jobs he might see himself doing in five years. He could only think of two, doctor and physical therapist. Glancing over at a neighbor's test, he copied down "firefighter" for the third choice.

The test results gave him high marks for being a firefighter.

"I always thought it was a job for people who were stupid or couldn't do anything else."

Carey brought home the grades. Carey's mom was driving them home to Ridgeview Drive when Jeff made a crack about Carey always getting better grades.

Mrs. Pico turned towards the back seat and told Jeff that Carey was Jewish and would always be smarter than he.

Carey's mom was Jewish and his dad Hispanic, although neither parent brought much ethnic tradition to the mixed marriage. They divorced after Carey started school, and he felt far more stigmatized by having no dad than by anything related to race.

Trudy Pico struggled to support her three kids and even went on welfare a while before landing a job with the state unemployment office. Carey got high marks in school, but failed in behavior. He did not think much about going to college.

Carey liked math. He remembers counting past 100 on the swingset at Webster. In fifth grade, he was picked to learn the slide rule, the hand-held calculator of the 1960s.

Martin Luther King Jr. was shot when Carey was in fourth grade. He says Jeff cried and wrote a song about King and the Kennedys. Horace Mann was an awakening to race, as cliques formed to pass judgement on others.

The counselors at Crawford pointed Carey towards college and soon, he was gone from the Webster neighborhood for good. He majored in physics and math at UC San Diego and went on to UC Santa Barbara for a master's degree in physics.

"I finally took advantage of my 'minority status,'" he says. "I got an internship with Bell Labs in New Jersey. They rivaled the best schools and produced Nobel prize winners."

Carey loved research and development and went for his Ph.D. at the University of Wisconsin. There he met his wife, an Argentinian of Jewish descent studying plant pathology. They lived in Dallas, Berkeley and finally Portland, doing post-doctoral research at various universities and working for high-tech firms.

Five years ago, Carey was hired to develop laser-soldering for the government. He was hot on the trail of welding hitherto unmergable metals when the Cold War petered out and the contract ended.

Until new work comes along, Carey is content to take care of his two little girls on he and his wife's one-acre spread in the woods outside Portland. He visits the old neighborhood now and then, but doesn't figure he'll ever move south of Silicon Valley.

"Sometimes I suggest my wife finds a job in San Diego. I like the beach," he says. "But nothing's run down in Portland — there are no bad neighborhoods here. I've lived in a lot of cities, but this is a nice place to end up."

I don't need any soldered by laser, but if Carey ever visits East

County, maybe he can show me the best way to hang a hammock.

I was born in La Mesa, not in East San Diego. We lived in Santee before I went to kindergarten, and left the Webster neighborhood in the middle of second grade.

My dad, an accountant, worked in Los Angeles for less than a year and we returned to East County in 1967. My parents never mentioned race and, like all the other parents around Webster, never seemed prejudiced as they quietly left the neighborhood for the suburbs.

Now, our children are going back to schools far more ethnically diverse than Webster ever was. They won't notice unless adults decide to pass on their stigmas, prejudices and biases. If anyone has mastered the art of seeing our common humanity, it's the little ones we meet in kindergarten.

Phillip recalls. "It turns out the smartest guy I ever met was a fire captain."

Phillip graduated and the summer before enrolling at Grossmont College, worked as a seasonal firefighter for the state Department of Forestry. Members of that summer crew included Bob Pfohl, now chief of the Santee Fire Department, and Ken Kremensky, a chief in Lakeside.

Phillip trained as a firefighter-paramedic and hired on to the Vista Fire Department. He moved to Escondido and married Cathy Willis in 1986. After 14 years and six back surgeries, Phillip moved out of fire suppression into administration and disaster preparedness.

Like his father before him, Phillip moved to the country. He lives with his wife and two boys 12 miles from Vista in Valley Center.

"My father-in-law is a rancher out this way," he says. "He's the last real cowboy, out riding the range and fixing fences."

In the heat of the summer like this, it's nice to know a Phillip's got a hose.

Carey Pico High-Tech Dude

Carey Pico may have inherited his surname from California's last Mexican governor, Pío Pico, but he was not considered Mexican. He was a towhead with blue eyes and freckles.

If anything, he was Jewish. This was made clear to Jeff Ousley one day when reports cards were given out. Jeff may have been bigger and more gregarious, but

Coalition offers holiday weekend travel tips

As summer draws to a close, The California Coalition For Vehicle Choice offers the following safety tips for travel during the Labor Day weekend when many families will take advantage of the last vacation opportunity before school begins. With more than 30 million Americans taking to the roads, remembering these simple tips will make getting there and back a lot safer.

- Before you take off, make sure your car is in good working condition. Check the oil, tire pressure, and the brake, cooling, steering and battery fluids. This will give you peace of mind and prevent unnecessary car problems.
- Stop every few hours for food, restroom breaks or just to stretch your legs. Eating while driving can be hazardous, as can restless children and frustrated parents

- Don't drive through the night. Be fully refreshed for the continuation of your road trip by getting a good night's sleep in a hotel. If you can't pull over, bring an alternate driver with you so you can take turns driving.
- Avoid road rage. If someone is provoking you, let them pass and then let it drop. If you find yourself yelling and getting angry, play it safe and pull over for a short break.

- Always wear a safety belt

According to AAA, in 1996 more than 60 percent of the occupants killed in fatal crashes were not buckled up. And remember, air bags with safety belts provide the greatest protection.

- If possible, take a road trip in the largest vehicle available. This will provide more room and comfort for passengers and provide the best protection in case of a crash. According to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, the death rate in small passenger cars is more than double the rate in the largest.

Labor Day weekend means school is back in session. That means more children will be on the road each weekday, walking and biking to and from school, and waiting for and exiting school buses. Karena Black of the California Coalition for Vehicle Choice urges all drivers to be extra careful when driving in and around school zones and bus stops. "It's better to exercise special caution on the roads and be a couple of minutes late to work, than to rush there and possibly kill or injure a child."

'Man of La Mancha' a definite change of pace for CCT audiences

by Greg Eichelberger

A gut-wrenching, emotional, almost-desperate performance is not something you'd normally write about in a Christian Community Theater production. Then again, a play like "Man Of La Mancha," a musical based on an incident in Miguel de Cervantes' life, isn't your basic CCT fare, either.

Cervantes, who was a contemporary of William Shakespeare (they died but ten days apart in 1616), was a Renaissance Hemingway; a soldier, scholar, adventurer and writer. He even fought in the famous battle of Lepanto (1571), a conflict which forever ended Turkish naval supremacy in the Mediterranean and has gone down as one of the most important in history.

He penned "Don Quixote" while a prisoner of the Spanish Inquisition, so the entire play takes place on a single, drab-gray, multi-level dungeon set (cleverly designed by Travis Russell).

The libretto, written by Dale Wasserman, has Cervantes, an actor, thrown into jail for "crimes against His Most High Majesty and the Catholic Church."

Cervantes (played with much aplomb by CCT and Starlight veteran, Bill Nolan) and his manservant Sancho (Bryant Callihan, "Oklahoma," "Guys & Dolls") are immediately put on trial-again-by the lowlife prisoners, led by the Governor (Daniel Blevins, "South Pacific").

Snatching a valuable manuscript from among Cervantes' costumes and properties, the Governor threatens to burn it unless the captive can defend himself in this mock courtroom. Thus begins Cervantes tale of the madman who thinks himself a knight errant and his quest to dream the impossible dream in a world where chivalry has turned into wars of religious persecution and terror.

Nolan slides into the role of Quixote with ease as he and a somewhat reluctant Callihan (who does a great job playing his sidekick as a combination of Buddy Hackett, Lou Costello and Joe Besser) set off to joust with windmills, fight invisible dragons and save unwilling damsels in distress.

They meet that damsel in an inn populated with the same type of scum residing in the gaol (only this time they're mule drivers, not prisoners of the Crown). Her name is Aldonza (a marvelous tour de force performance by La Mesa's Eleni Gianulis), she of dirty hands, ripped skirt and easy virtue. But the addled Quixote sees her not as she is, but as a vision of virginal purity, even calling her "Dulcinea."

Torn between reality and this imposed fantasy placed on her by the holy fool, she battles for her soul and finally realizes that even though she is in the world, she doesn't have to be of the world. Gianulis threads the precarious needle between true emotion and over-the-top histrionics perfectly. Others in the cast aren't so fortunate, and, at times, it resembles those "dramatic" intermissions in World Championship Wrestling pay-per-view events.

"This is certainly the most intense role I've played," said the daughter of Jim and Debbie Gianulis, currently a music and vocal major at the University of Southern California, and who has worked with the likes of James Ingram and Marni Nixon. "It's not cheery like 'Godspell,' or any other CCT production I've been in, but I love it. The cast is wonderful."

While director Tom Schmidt ("South Pacific") specifically sought "actors who could sing" as opposed to the other way around, he seems to have settled for a few of each. Nolan, an inspired baritone, carries most of the Mitch Leigh (music)-Joe Darion (lyrics) tunes ("I Am Don Quixote," "Dulcinea," "The Quest," and the play's single most-recognizable number, "The Impossible Dream"), while Gianulis does a fine job with "What Does He Want Of Me?," "Aldonza" and "Dulcinea." Others, including Lakeside's Jody Morgan (The Innkeeper), William D. Wigdahl (The Barber), James Flynn (The Padre), Paula Steiger (Antonia), and Nathan Lacy (The Duke) contribute nicely with "The Abduction," "The Dubbing," "To Each His Dulcinea," "I'm Only Thinking Of Him," "The Barber Song" and "Little Bird."

Harvey Tellinghuisen's 20-piece orchestra, hidden behind the set and heavy on the guitar and castanets, adds to overall dark, Spanish flavor of the play.

"Man Of La Mancha's" final performance begins at 8 p.m. at the Mt. Helix Amphitheater on Saturday. For ticket information, contact Lynette Fisk at 588-0206.
